

The Humanities have always been neglected in Science Communication. The internet has changed this scenario a bit. Without relying on intermediaries – other than technology – scientists in the Humanities found space to make more research emerge in the areas of History, Sociology, Linguistics, Literature and... Anthropology. And in this cyberspace, the fastest growing medium is the podcast. On air: Anthropology. Stories in Podcast tells the adventures of anthropologists that have become public. Stories that involve people, science, technologies, places and much of what is studied in this area. All this in a podcast, for those who want to listen, whenever they want, the way they want. In chapters, the authors write about the podcasts, inviting readers to get to know this science and also to follow the episodes to learn more and more about the world, the people and things that inhabit it, from the perspective of Anthropology.

Simone Pallone de Figueiredo (Labjor/Unicamp)

